Students fill Utah universities, community colleges

RICH VALENTINE
Daily Universe Staff Writer

Students are pouring into universities and community colleges because of smaller class sizes, low course fees that reflect changes in job markets.

Snow College, Dixie and Snow College had enrollment increases this year, four-year and graduate students, saw limited growth, due to the increase in the surrounding school population.

College enrollment is more than 1,000 from last year.

Primary reasons for Dixie's enrollment are that more of students want to go to college and students get more per capita at community colleges than large universities, Petersen said.

"Our market is students who are looking for a total academic experience," said Gerald Day, president of Snow College. "Community colleges have done a lot better at marketing themselves. Students also have a lot of advantages — small classes, good education and a low cost."

Snow College's student body increased 7.5 percent from last year's enrollment and has doubled since 1987, Day said.

"Our market is students who are looking for a total academic experience," said Gerald Day, president of Snow College. "Community colleges have done a lot better at marketing themselves. Students also have a lot of advantages — small classes, good education and a low cost."

UVSC's student population increased 26.5 percent from last year, according to a prepared statement. One reason for the record increase is the change in calculating enrollment. The college now counts concurrent enrollment students who take college-level courses while in high school.

"We never counted concurrent enrollment students until this year," said Val Peterson, assistant vice-president.

ident for college relations. "All colleges do it. Now we can compare apples to apples when you look at colleges."

UVSC's success is also due to a growing high school population and the school's marketable two-year and four-year programs, Peterson said. UVSC offers four-year degrees in business management, computer science/information systems and technology management, which teaches management training with specific skills learned at the college.

"Generally, we respond to the industry's needs," Peterson said. "In Utah we have Novell and other local computer companies that need trained people. We also survey the needs of the students. Then we try to put those needs together."

"We try to match students up with a career choice that will be marketable," Peterson said. "There's no use training students to work on steam engines if there are no steam engines to work on. Teaching trades and applied technology has always been an important part of UVSC's mission."

BYU attorneys request ACLU lawsuit dismissal

By HANS K. MEYER
Assistant Campus Editor

In response to an American Civil Liberties Union lawsuit filed in July, BYU attorneys filed a motion Monday with federal judge David Winder asking the judge to dismiss the ACLU's challenge to the BYU off-campus housing policy.

Brent Harker, assistant director of BYU Public Communications, said he feels confident the motion will be successful.

"We are backed by the students and the law," Harker said. "We are backed by 40 years of practice established by a long-standing precedent. I see no reason legally why this policy should be challenged."

On the other hand, Kathryn Kendell, staff attorney for the ACLU, feels asking for dismissal is too high a standard for BYU to seek. BYU is saying that the legal issues are so clear the judge should be entitled to judge on the case without a trial, Kendell said.

"We've seen all the arguments they made before, and most of them are irrelevant to our claims against landlords," Kendell said.

Portions of the law are in the ACLU's favor, Kendell added, and she plans to ask the judge to rule on these claims without a trial. It is likely, though, the case will go to trial on some of our claims, like the religious discrimination issue, because the ACLU wants to develop a better basis. "We feel this is an appropriate case to be decided without a trial," Kendell said.

Eugene Bramhall, general counsel for the University, said BYU is only an intervenor in the suit, and had to petition the judge to be included. The landlords named in the suit will also issue a response within the next 10 days.

"It's our housing policy being challenged," said David Thomas, general counsel for BYU. "Landlords are just following it out of contract with us."

The ACLU did not include BYU in the suit, however, because BYU can discriminate against anyone, Kendell said. The Fair Housing Act allows a religious exemption for a religious organization for its own housing.

"BYU can't throw that exemption cloak over private, for-profit landlords," Kendell said. "BYU's trying to turn Provo into a company town."

According to the motion, ACLU's interpretation of the Fair Housing Act prevents BYU students from living in a place that fosters their religious beliefs and safeguards their privacy.

"It is the plaintiffs and the ACLU — not the University — who are attempting to stifle the enjoyment of fundamental liberties," according to BYU's argument.

In addition, Thomas said the consti-

Date, acquaintance rape incidence increases

Editor's note: The following article is the second in a three-part series addressing issues of rape and its effects on victims. Yesterday's article focused on the increasing rate of rape incidents in Utah County and the United States.

By JENNIFER GANTT
Daily Universe Staff Writer

In addition to the rapid increase of reported rapes in Utah County, the incidence of date rape and acquaintance rape — the two most frequent types of rapes committed — is also on the rise.

In the last two years, the number of rapes reported to the Center for Women and Children in Crisis, Inc., have doubled; over half of those reported were date rapes.

The center separates rape into three categories: "Blitz" rape is stranger rape; "Group" rape deals with one victim and more than one perpetrator; and "Acquaintance" rape, also known as date rape, which is the most prevalent type of rape committed in this area, said Kay Miller, a member of the center's Rape Crisis Team.

A recent Stanford survey revealed that one-third of the women surveyed had been the victim of date rape. One out of six college women is a victim of rape or attempted rape, Miller said.

In the U.S., an estimated 60 to 80 percent of rape is date or acquaintance rape" according to surveys by Mary P. Koss, professor of psychiatry at the University of Arizona Medical School.

The National Women's Survey, completed in April 1992, showed that only 22 percent of rape victims were assaulted by someone they had never seen before or did not know well.

These figures dispute the belief that most women are raped by strangers. In fact, the survey showed that 36 percent were raped by a relative, and 39 percent were raped by a non-relative such as a boyfriend, neighbor or other friend.

Another survey by Koss showed that 886 completed and attempted rapes for one year were reported in a group of 3,187 women; an incidence rate of 27 percent. Of the 886 women raped, 54 percent were raped by dates.

Acquaintance rapists may rape again and often have many victims, said the center, which advises that every rape be reported to stop the trend.

The reports by the center have been verified by a study of college students. They reported that 35 percent of the men "indicated some likelihood that they would commit a violent rape of a woman who had refused an advance if they were reassured of getting away with it."

International students are more vulnerable, said Damaris Methner of the Counseling and Development Center. The perpetrators know that the students are less likely to report the rape because they fear losing their visas or status.

"Rape has no boundaries," according to a pamphlet from the center. "Victims come in all shapes and sizes, all ages, races, religions and economic strata; no one is exempt."

Methner said perpetrators who aren't students sometimes find BYU's

Santo Domingo after several hours of waiting.

Border officials in the Dominican Republic said Francois was accompanied by his brother, Evans Francois, a businessman and former Haitian consul to the Dominican Republic, his wife, two other women and three bodyguards.

Francois left behind a resignation letter defending his actions. "It was not for me to juggle with the destiny of the country," he wrote, in words broadcast on local radio. "I am proud of myself."

Francois, who as a precinct chief spearheaded the overthrow of Aristide in September 1991, had masterminded squads of "attackers," or army auxiliaries, responsible for many of the thousands of political killings since.

Francois, army chief Raoul Cedras and army chief-of-staff Philippe Biamby were to leave power by Oct. 15 under a last-minute agreement negotiated with former President Carter that averted a U.S. invasion.

The news of Francois' departure flabbergasted and angered Haitian soldiers, who demanded an explanation from Cedars. Several said Francois, who made a fortune in contraband and corruption since the coup, even skipped out with their pensions.

Francois was widely seen as the power behind the three years of military domination. He enriched himself through control of customs, ports and telecommunications divisions of government. He also ran the state car insurance company and imported cars.

Truth, honesty necessary for repentance, Bergin says

By RAYMOND ROBINSON
Daily Universe Staff Writer

Guided by truth, repentance is an exercise in honesty, said Allen Bergin, professor of clinical psychology at the Campus Devotional on Tuesday.

Bergin, a convert to The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and current president of the BYU 5th Stake, described the steps of repentance from a psychologist's point of view.

Bergin separated the repentance process into three categories: self-confrontation, self-control and self-sacrifice.

Self-confrontation includes sorrow and confession, Bergin said. In a study of 60 BYU students, those who avoided repentance did so because self-confrontation is a threat to self-esteem.

These students would wait for the guilt to subside, convince themselves the sin was not serious or punish themselves for a few days. Quoting President Spencer W. Kimball, Bergin said, "(A) Band-Aid is not sufficient for a deep wound ... sometimes spiritual surgery is required."

This "spiritual surgery" requires the sinner to overcome defenses and go through a self-examination, Bergin said. It involves suffering such as Alma's, who suffered for three days and nights as he examined his soul.

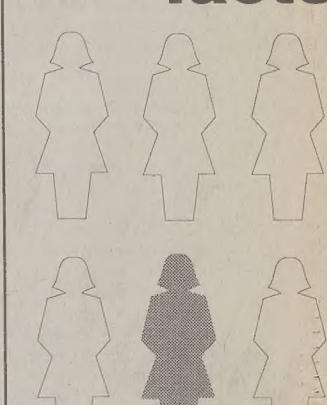

Self-sacrifice includes making restitution, forgiving, obeying, serving and loving, Bergin said.

Self-sacrifice completes the repentance process, Bergin said. New patterns of life are established.

"Virtue furnishes our thoughts, and our heart is changed mightily," Bergin said.

"Have confidence that Heavenly Father loves you," Bergin said. "(This) healing endows us with new life — many have experienced the joy of forgiveness."

Clinic murder suspect acts as own lawyer

PENSACOLA, Fla. — Acting as his own lawyer after another change of heart, a man accused of killing an abortion doctor warned the jury at the start of his trial Tuesday that those who countenance abortion "will answer to God."

"May God have mercy on us all," Paul Hill declared in his opening statement in federal court.

Hill then asked no questions of prosecution witnesses who said they saw him or a man looking like him outside a clinic at the time of the July 29 shotgun slayings of Dr. John Bayard Britton, 69, and bodyguard James H. Barrett, 74.

The 40-year-old former minister is the first person to stand trial under the federal law enacted earlier this year against injuring or otherwise interfering with anyone entering an abortion clinic. Conviction could bring a life prison term.

Hill is also awaiting trial in state court on charges of murder and attempted murder; if convicted there, he could get the electric chair.

Hill, a former pastor in the Presbyterian Church in America and the Orthodox Presbyterian Church, took over his defense after U.S. District Judge Roger Vinson refused to let him argue the killings were justifiable homicide. Hill originally had a public defender.

Cautious Hawaii residents prepare for wave

HONOLULU — Coastal residents were told to leave their homes, beaches were closed and public schools canceled classes Tuesday because of the possibility of a huge wave being kicked up by an earthquake thousands of miles away.

An offshore quake estimated at magnitude 7.9 hit northern Japan Tuesday morning, the strongest to hit Japan in 25 years. Such quakes can kick up tsunamis that travel across an ocean in a matter of hours.

A small wave first hit Wake Island, about 2,000 miles west of Hawaii, civil defense officials said. The wave was only about 6 inches high, Harris said. It was a "very good indication" that the waves would not be large in Alaska.

The effect was also minor in the western Aleutian Islands of Alaska.

In Hawaii, emergency warning sirens sounded shortly after 6:30 a.m..

Early snow, rainfall boost Utah water level

SALT LAKE CITY — Utah's new water year is off to a good start with valley rains and mountain snows.

Snow fell Monday as low as the 6,000-foot level in Utah's northern and central mountains and down to 8,000 feet in the southern mountains.

Brighton reported 6 inches of snow at midmountain by late Monday, while Alta reported 7 inches. Snowbird recorded 9 inches at the top of its tram.

Snow accumulations were expected to melt quickly, with more rain and snow forecast for this week.

National Weather Service meteorologist William Alder is hoping the showers of late September and early October signal a change in the weather.

"It's imperative that we have some productive storms from around November to April," he said. "Last winter it was OK, but it wasn't terribly exciting."

The water year that ended Sept. 30 was marked by record heat and long periods of little or no precipitation.

LDS Public Affairs produces 9 radio programs

The LDS Public Affairs department announced nine new 30-minute programs that have already begun airing as part of the Times and Seasons series.

Since 1988, the public affairs department has been producing radio programs as part of the series. The documentaries address moral and social issues.

The new programs address topics such as the free press, self-esteem, family traditions, kicking smoking habits, educating children, the marriage partnership, crime prevention, the learning process and literacy.

The programs feature BYU students, general authorities, Church members and experts, said Donald G. Russell, media marketing manager for the Times and Seasons programs.

The programs are aired on approximately 800 stations throughout the United States and Canada, Russell said. Radio broadcasts are on Sundays between 5 a.m. and 11 a.m.

Although the programs are produced by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, they are presented as an informational rather than as a missionary effort, Russell said. The only mention of the LDS Church, besides identifying the people featured in the program, is at the end of the program when the narrator announces that the series are funded by the LDS Church.

"Community colleges have the goal to meet the need of the community and the local job market," Petersen said. "Community colleges can quickly assess the needs of the community and meet those needs."

Not all community colleges have flexible curriculums.

"Our programs are more rigid," Day said. "Our growth is due to the cost benefits to the students because of the high academic courses at low cost."

Weber State University, in Ogden, offers two-year, four-year and graduate programs. No growth is projected for this year, said Kathleen Lukken, associate provost of Weber State.

"We have lots of theories why the student body hasn't grown, but no facts," Lukken said. "We find our student body tends to work part time. We're really influenced by the local economy, and if the job market is really hot, enrollment goes down."

"The surrounding high school population hasn't grown very much," Lukken said. "So our enrollment hasn't grown either."

Some of Weber State's curriculum is flexible, depending on the subject.

"We do change curriculum for our two-year programs," Lukken said.

Freedom of religion escalates with dissolution of Soviet Union

GAYLON GARBETT
Senior Reporter

Freedom is an issue that is pushing through rapid legal progression in countries all over the world, especially those left behind after the demise of the Soviet Union, said Gary Browning, a professor of Germanic languages. Browning, who moderated a panel at a recent Russian church/state symposium, said religious groups have caused some states to number of changes in legislative procedures. The rapid succession of both religious and state reforms has significant effect on the people of Russia, said Alexander Kudryavtsev, head of the Department of Religious Affairs in Russia. In the 1980s, Kudryavtsev said, 1 percent of the population called themselves believers, while about 40 percent of the population called themselves non-believers. By 1993, the number of believers had surged to 60 million people, which translates to about 30 percent of the population. Non-believers dwindled to about 11 percent.

Today, more than 12,000 religious groups have been registered in Russia, he said.

The largest Russian religious group is the Russian Orthodox Church, followed by several Islam and Protestant groups.

"With the broad number of ethnic groups in Russia there are many religions," Kudryavtsev said.

Increased freedom granted to religious groups has caused an influx of religious cults and organizations, he said, causing some problems in determining how to regulate foreign institutions within Russia.

"There must be a way to protect our country from these groups that are not legitimate," Kudryavtsev said.

Rape and sexual assault suffer in legal definition

VALLIERE JONES

Terms "rape" and "sexual assault" often used interchangeably. Significant differences exist between the two crimes.

In the church, a detective with the police Department, said people sometimes charged with assault or rape doesn't fit into a specific category.

It doesn't fit appropriate any crime or intent that is prove can be charged as he said, and noted that kissing can fall under this do occur in Provo," he said. According to Utah law, rape is sex without consent, if a victim is married or not. First degree felony and carries maximum mandatory sentence of 15 years, though offenders may be fined for life.

"They love the friendliness of the LDS culture — an open, friendly, generous culture," Methner said.

Teaching students to be date-smart is important, Methner said. She also pointed out that merely being paranoid will not help students, although they should be weary of certain situations.

Get to know people in group situations first, Methner suggested. Also, avoid ambiguous situations by arranging to be accompanied by other people.

Whatever the situation, those that have endured sexual trauma are not the one responsible, states the Masters & Johnson Sexual Trauma Program. The most important thing to remember, it says, is that the blame does not fall on the survivor but on the perpetrator.

Forcible sexual abuse is a second degree felony, with a sentence of not less than one year but no more than 15 years.

In the case of rape, "call the Provo police dispatch immediately and, if possible, jot down a description of the person," Upchurch said.

International viewpoint Global population: A blessing or curse?

Earlier this month a United Nations-sponsored International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) was held in Cairo, Egypt. An estimated 20,000 delegates from 82 countries attended the eight-day conference. Prominent among the dignitaries were UN Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali, Pakistani Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, U.S. Vice President Al Gore, and as some might mention, American actress Jane Fonda.

A lot of controversy was raised regarding the ICPD, because the proposed agenda, called the Programme of Action, dealt with very sensitive issues such as premarital sex, abortion and the protection of homosexuals. These topics, of course, go against the religion of the land—Islam. Not only that, but they contradict Christian teachings as well, and this resulted in a unified stand by Al-Azhar (the top non-governmental authority on Islam),

by Nevine Khalil

and the Coptic Church in Egypt against the ICPD. Laymen and intellectuals called for the cancellation of the conference, and a number of Arab countries boycotted it. A lawsuit was filed against the hosts, (the case was lost), and religious militants threatened the lives of the delegates, (but no incidents occurred).

I think that all this was a bit unfortunate, because the whole controversy could have been avoided had the text of the Programme of Action been read closely and the Arabic translation not been so ambiguous. I read most of the blockbuster Programme of Action, and there was nothing wrong with it. The "sticky" parts were the ones that discussed how birth control methods should be available to all those who need them (which some chose to include teenagers and unmarried couples), and another part saying that if an abortion needed to be done, then legal medical care and facilities should be provided (and some took that to mean that abortion will be legal).

Putting the "ethics" of the ICPD aside, I believe that it was important for Egypt to hold such a conference in its capital. It was a chance for us to show the whole world that the security situation was well under control, and that the wave of terrorism launched by a bunch of hirelings, who claim to be Muslims, against tourists and Egyptians has now retreated. This was achieved, because if it hadn't I'm sure CNN would have never let Egypt live it down. Nonetheless, I have an argument against the ICPD. I disagree with holding a conference on population control for the "benefit" of the third world. I don't think the "first world" should dictate down to the "third world" what it should do with its population. One cannot set rules regulating population growth for all developing countries, and why should one? India has an overpopulation problem, but Egypt doesn't. Egypt may seem as an underdeveloped, overpopulated country which needs intensive family planning programs, but that is only scratching the surface. The 60 million inhabitants of Egypt live on not more than five percent of the land.

So, it's not a problem of overpopulation, but distribution. Why should Egypt feel it needs to apply rigid "first world" population control regulations?

I believe humans in any country, even in overpopulated ones, can be turned into an effective, beneficial resource for developing the country. This human resource, if guided well, can become an efficient, productive sector which will be able to raise the country from a "second" or "third" to a "first" world echelon. China is an example.

If the "first" world feels it wants to help developing countries, then it should invest more time and effort in developing the latter's human resources instead of exterminating them, by holding an International Conference on Population and Development.

Driving my way through Utah maybe

by Lanna
Carter

I am from California, Rancho Cucamonga, an L.A. suburb to be exact. I was born and raised in California. I only say this because I grew up accustomed to rush-hour traffic in L.A. and learned to appreciate (or at least tolerate) three-hour commutes to and from downtown, as well as the aggressive, though semi-polite drivers. So, when I moved to Utah two years ago to begin my endeavors here at BYU, I assumed that traffic would be improved and drivers would not be as aggressive as back home because after all, this is Happy Valley. What a wake-up Utah County was for me.

At first, I thought that perhaps these reckless drivers who accosted my every step were teenagers taking their first excursion "behind the wheel" but on closer observation I saw license plates not only from Utah but from Idaho, Nevada, New York, Colorado, Hawaii, Kentucky, Florida and every other state imaginable (yes, including my beloved home state). I could only assume (to my dismay) that these drivers were students going to BYU and UVSC.

Now, is it possible that when entering the college environment, one forgets all notions of safe driving? Or, is it when one enters Utah this phenomenon occurs? After witnessing the driving skills of residents in Utah, I have come to the conclusion that this trait is not just indigenous to college-age students.

I do not claim to be the most skilled driver, but I do know that you don't make a right hand turn across three lanes of on-coming traffic from the left hand lane (while signalling to turn left, I might add). I also don't see the reasoning in driving a tractor down the highway with snow chains on in the middle of May.

I know that you shouldn't speed up when someone is in the cross-walk to scare him or her off the road, or because you have premeditated of actually hitting the unsuspecting victim. Yes, I have seen this happen, and I have fallen prey to this more than once. After the first such incident, my sojourn at BYU had become a pedestrian's nightmare.

I purchased my first car a few weeks ago, and I thought the nightmare would end. I was mistaken. Instead of having to sweat about someone hitting me as if it were a sport only known to Utah residents, I have to worry about inconsiderate motorists riding my bumper on the freeway in the fast lane because I am going 75 mph and he goes 76 mph. Now, if someone approaches from behind, I will generally merge middle lane to let the other vehicle pass. I do not need someone flash his or her headlights, honk an obnoxious horn at me or bumper or have him or her pass me rudely cut me off, or a myriad of others that have happened to me since I became a frequent user of the Utah freeway systems.

Another phenomenon that confounds me is the power that the Highway Patrol exerts over motorists. As I cruise along at 70 mph when red lights blind me as everyone slows to 55 mph as they approach a "cop". I bold enough to pass an officer?

This enigma also occurs when approaching the Point of the Mountain from Salt Lake City. You'd think they are stopping to look at State Penn to see what is going on. I appreciate drivers slowing down to in this 65 mph zone especially on an Perhaps I am overly short-tempered, but I haven't ingratiated myself into driving culture but I must say that if I am going to be hazard on the road, please consider staying off the road for the benefit of those who have places to go and see.

Beard card not so bad

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to a letter to the editor about beards at BYU. The "extensive interview" written about in the letter took me all of five minutes, and eight dollars. The doctor asked me why I needed a beard card, and I told him I have a skin condition. He asked me to sign a waiver and told me to keep my beard short and neat. Major heartache let me tell you, I had great plans for that eight bucks.

Second, I have been asked to display my prized beard card maybe twice on campus. All the other times I have been asked to show it to someone, it was by a friend who had never seen one before. I was asked if I had a beard card more times before I actually got the darn thing than since I've had one. Actually I am happy to show the card. If I have to pay 16 bucks a year (you have to renew the turkey every six months) for the thing, you better believe I'm going to show it to someone.

Third, people in the Library, the Testing Center, and anywhere else on campus are required to ask for the card. How do they know you are one of the few people who are actually dumb enough to pay to wear a beard?

Believe me any guy will "take several months to grow a beard without first obtaining a permit." It's not like it is so hard. All you do is not shave for a few weeks, and it's a lot cheaper to go home and shave on occasion than to pay $16 a year for the card.

Lastly, if it bothers you that much to have to show your card, shave.

To salute (or not) the flag

To the Editor:

I've attended BYU four years now, and I feel like my experience here wouldn't be complete if I didn't write at least one letter to the editor.

I'd like to address the gentleman who feels that anyone who neglects to stop for the national anthem played daily on this campus is being disrespectful to the United States as a country.

This argument isn't new; I've seen it every year since coming to BYU. So I'll give the usual response.

Brigham Young University is sponsored and operated by The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. The church is a world-wide church consisting of members from various nationalities. Some of us come to BYU from different countries that have been invaded by the United States. They've seen friends or family members killed by U.S. soldiers wearing the star spangled banner on their arms. Perhaps such students are among those who neglect to pay homage to the national anthem and flag ceremony. Can you blame them?

I am Canadian, and whenever you play the national anthem it doesn't create any kind of a "moment" for me, and so I don't stop for it. BYU is for students from around the world. If you choose to play the U.S. national anthem on this campus, realize that not everyone is a citizen of the United States and not everyone cares to stop for it. Canadians didn't get uptight when you raised our flag upside down at the World Series. We actually got a good laugh out of it. Don't get uptight when others don't feel the same way about your country as you do.

Why 'Schindler's List'?

To the Editor:

To pull "Schindler's List" from the Varsity Theater schedule for moral reasons raises serious questions about the coherence of the "moral" standards underlying this decision. After all, "Schindler's List" has to be considered one of the few mainstream Hollywood productions that tells its story in order to promote values. It tells the story of a man who spends his fortune, who risks his reputation and his life in order to save the enemies of an evil regime. How can this violate gospel principles? Supposedly, because it contains "violence, obscenities and brief nudity."

This reveals an attitude that judges morality on the basis of quantitative measurements rather than evaluating the meaning of certain symbols in the context of this movie. What is the meaning of swearing, cruelty and adultery in "Schindler's List"? Let's face it, Oskar Schindler, the hero of the event, is a creep. He employs Jewish labor slaves in order to make himself a fortune, manipulates and bribes SS-Officers, and on his wife. He has excessive party time and is probably an alcoholic.

He feels comfortable about it I must say. Oskar Schindler a hedonist. Suddenly a contradictory streak in his personality.

Schindler to change his attitude: could compassion prevail over his life? As compassionate character traits Oskar Schindler and saves the lives of several hundred people. "Schindler's List" is a movie about If nudity, profanity and violence are central to the meaning of the movie, think we can all agree that a repeatable example for most of us for the group of sinners among us belong every once in a while.

Therefore, I may conclude that the editing or not showing "Schindler's List" not only illogical but also results in my appeal to the public community department to reconsider this decision provide BYU students the opportunity an extraordinary decision of a really sinner.

Prayer debate

To the Editor:

Since the time I attended here 15 years ago, I occasionally visit friends on campus. I am always sure to pick up a copy of the Daily Universe every time I'm on campus. Last visited, Wednesday September 14, I was surprised to read the cover story was about debate over class prayer. Some professors expressed the opinion that the prayer gets in the way and becomes irrelevant. It seemed sad to me and perhaps that those concerned about frequent prayer don't hunger and thirst for it. Ephesians 6:18 refers to constant prayer on all occasions. 1 Thessalonians 5:17 commands us to "pray without ceasing." I understand the "no tides" argument, but the answer stance of prayers and not cutting them reducing them from academic life.

It's ironic that this story was published the same day as International Student Day where students all over the world gathered around their flagpoles and prayed ranging from the health and well-being of their families to nation to drug abuse.

gaining, or cave exploring, is a unique form of entertainment and adventure for all types of people. You can handle cave exploring as they go at their own pace.

Randy Gainer, a state geologist for 21 years and has studied caves over the country. He has explored the internationally known House and Hell Hole caves in Arizona. He has explored glacial lakes in Alaska and has seen about 100 caves that exist.

"I have built confidence by going in, Gainer said. While I remember to constantly look back the way in, he said.

I spent hours trying to find the entrance to a 200 foot long and 300 foot deep cavern. I had entered the cavern and never made reference of the entrance to this specific cavern,"

People have in caves is things that are beyond their imagination. They get hurt or they find themselves in places where they loose control.

People who have claustrophobia explore. They should go at a comfortable pace. They can control their minds. The conditions don't affect their minds that do, Gainer said.

The greatest thing to me is to find areas where no one has been before," Gainer said. "It's fun to map out areas that have been explored."

Said cave exploring has something for everyone. Vertical and tight crawls are some of the exhilarating experiences.

Cliffs of over hundreds of feet drop down test the most experienced climbers. Tight crawls and movement is made in inches of concentration and patience, uses a pocketknife or a pack knife is the difference in getting through a tight squeeze, Gainer said.

"I have even stripped my underwear to make it fit," Gainer said.

Nutty Putty Cave, in Utah County near Lake, is a good entry point for洞穴探索者. Doug Hansen, owner of Hansen Mountaineering and freerunner.

"It is not bigger than a couple of yards," and the temperatures constant at about 75 degrees," Hansen said.

A COUPLE OF SPELKERS: Erin Douglas and Carol Stockett explore Nutty Putty Cave.

March through October. Tours are not held during winter months because access to the cave becomes difficult, said David Webb, manager of Outdoors Unlimited.

Students can also explore the cave in groups by themselves.

Carol Stockett, a junior majoring in Elementary Education at Weber State University explored Nutty Putty Cave on Saturday with a group of friends.

Stockett said the cave entrance at Nutty Putty is probably the hardest part of the cave.

The entrance is through a small hole where one has to crawl on their hands and knees to enter. When it rains, the hole fills up with water, and it makes getting into the cave even more difficult.

"Cave exploring wasn't too difficult, if I can do it anybody can," Stockett said. "The only thing I regret is I wish I could've spent more time in the cave."

Noise still disturbs National Parks

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Current restrictions on tour flights have not resolved longstanding noise problems at the Grand Canyon and tougher controls on air tour operations will be needed, the Interior Department said Monday.

But the National Park Service's report to Congress on aircraft noise said the problem is growing as well as many other parks and monuments, from the Statue of Liberty in New York City to the Volcanoes National Park in Hawaii.

In the report, the department said that it will develop a series of requirements aimed at cutting aircraft noise at the Grand Canyon over the next 15 years, including demands for quieter aircraft.

"The problem isn't going to be resolved (only) by minimum altitude rules," George Frampton Jr., assistant secretary for fish and wildlife and parks, told reporters.

He said that aircraft noise has become a "rapidly growing threat" at scores of parks, with the problem particularly severe at the Grand Canyon, where 10,000 people a day fly over the scenic park during summer months.

Frampton said a scheme of flight restrictions imposed at the canyon six years ago — including development of air corridors and minimum altitudes — "doesn't even come close" to meeting noise requirements.

He said at best only a third of the park is quiet at least 70 percent of the time.

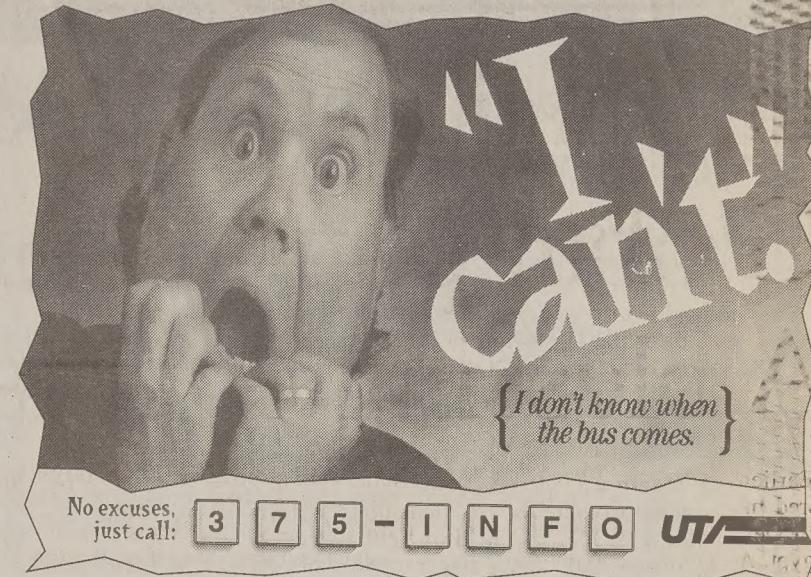

The noise controversy has plagued the Grand Canyon for years as a growing number of tour operators have used helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft to give visitors a birds-eye view of one of the country's natural spectacles.

An estimated 800,000 people a year are flown by some 40 air tour operators at the Grand Canyon.

The problem is widespread. An estimated 20 percent of the parks and monuments administered by the Park Service "have an immediate or long-term potential problem with aircraft overflights," said Frampton.

Walsh leads list of week's best

By CRAIG CRAZE
Assistant Sports Editor

Two touchdown passes and 306 yards passing in BYU's win over Utah State Friday night was enough to get quarterback John Walsh picked as the Cougar's offensive player of the week.

Walsh completed 17 of 27 passes, including 27-yard and 52-yard touchdown bombs to Itula Mili and Hema Heimuli, respectively. With a 34-6 lead late in the third quarter, Walsh was pulled from the game and replaced by senior Steve Clements.

Having caught a pass in the last 14 games, Tim Nowatzke was named the top receiver of the game. He had one catch for six yards in BYU's game against USU. Stan Raas was chosen as linebacker of the game for his five unassisted tackles, one assisted tackle, two tackles for losses and one sack against the Aggies.

Travis Hall was named as the top defensive lineman of the week for the third time this year. Friday he had one assisted tackle, four tackles for losses, four hurries and one pass deflection.

The top defensive back of the game was Lane Hale, who started only after team co-captain Cory Cook was injured in pregame exercises.

Tim Hanshaw was chosen by the BYU coaches as the top offensive lineman for the second week in a row. Dennis Simmons was named as the special teams player of the game for his two unassisted tackles on kickoffs.

Jim Dusara, the man who started women's soccer at BYU, will lead UVSC tonight against the school whose soccer fortunes he guided for nearly 15 years.

Dusara's Lady Wolverines invade Cougar turf tonight as the two teams square off at HAWS Field.

The game will be the first meeting ever between the two clubs.

"We are looking forward to playing BYU," Dusara said. "We've got nothing to lose ... and expect to give them a good game."

Dusara said his young team is 2-2 for the season. He said the Wolverines have nothing to lose against BYU, which enters the game with a 9-1-1 record.

"They've got more experience, more exposure, more confidence and skill," Dusara said. "But we will gain good experience (playing BYU)."

Dusara said UVSC's biggest challenge in his personal homecoming will be trying to score against the stifling Cougar defense.

Coach Dusara, whose real name is Savji, put BYU soccer on the map in the 1970's by leading the charge to elevate the men's team to the NCAA. Dusara coached the BYU men's team for 13 years beginning in 1974.

Dusara started the women's soccer program at UVSC this year.

His club plays in the Intermountain Collegiate Soccer Association, made up primarily of junior colleges in the region.

Dusara said the BYU women's soccer program, which he helped start in 1976, has progressed significantly. He praised BYU's recent move to upgrade women's soccer to the NCAA.

"It (the move) will definitely affect the program. They will do well," Dusara said.

EL PASO, Texas — Western Athletic Conference leaders are ready to begin piecing together a complex puzzle.

League officials in April invited six schools to join the WAC's current 10 members. Now six months later, they are undertaking the task of actually putting together a 16-team league.

"We're facing a fairly large and encompassing list of things to do. We've definitely go our hands full," new league commissioner Karl Benson said Monday, a day before the beginning of the WAC's fall meeting.

The meetings mark the first time all 16 league members have come together, so they are to a certain extent a get-acquainted gathering, said WAC associate commissioner Jeff Hurd.

"In the larger picture, it's where we begin getting serious about the 16-team league and how it's going to be formatted," Hurd said.

Play in the expanded conference begins in September 1996 and league officials have already completed some preliminary six-year football and basketball schedules, which will be presented to officials at the meetings.

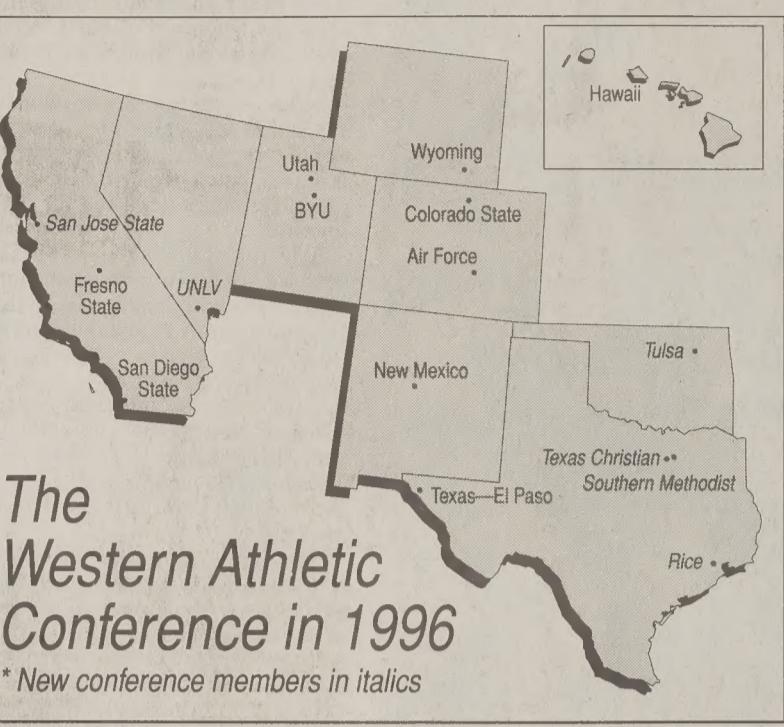

The lists includes the planned matchups, although actual dates have not yet been decided. Benson said he hopes the schedules can be finalized by the time the meetings end Wednesday.

For football, officials will also be discussing the logistics of a championship game and possible sites.

The WAC is considering El Paso for the game — an idea broached by the Sun Bowl Association, said Benson, who had breakfast Monday morning with the head of the association, Tom Starr.

Starr's group operates the annual John Hancock Bowl. Benson said the WAC will also look at other sites, including San Diego and Denver.

Also on the agenda is the format for the 1996-97 basketball tournament and proposed sites. Dallas, Las Vegas, Salt Lake City and Albuquerque, this year's host, have all come up in site discussions. "For other championship sports like track and field, we haven't even begun to look at those to see how they're going to be conducted," said Hurd.

This week's meetings are intended to lay the groundwork for making decisions in those areas.

WAC athletic directors, faculty representatives and senior women's administrators will hold section meetings beginning Tuesday morning at the El Paso Convention Center. Joint sessions will take place Wednesday. Monday was reserved primarily for social functions.

WAC officials said they aren't sure how many concrete plans the meetings will yield, but they are generally enthusiastic about the prospects.

"What I would like to accomplish is to develop the spirit of cooperation that will be needed as we look to the future of the WAC," Benson said.

NFL stadium still in question

1988 and certainly didn't offer to build a new stadium in St. Louis to keep them here.

Tagliabue told Fox during its half-time show Sunday that the league is considering helping Los Angeles build a new football stadium — a stadium that could be used by the Raiders and/or the Los Angeles Rams.

"We'd like to keep the NFL strong in Los Angeles," Tagliabue said. "We think maybe we have a concept that could work if it's keyed to the Super Bowl — playing the Super Bowl on a rotating basis."

Under this idea, the Super Bowl apparently would be played in L.A. every other year, which would be a radical departure from recent Super Bowl policy. In the last seven years, the Super Bowl has been played at seven different sites.

League spokesman Greg Aiello said Monday that the L.A. stadium concept was brought up at the end of last week's owners meeting in Dallas. The discussion lasted only five minutes.

However, most of the uniforms have been received well and definitely have become fodder for the NFL fan, Roberts said.

"The throwback uniforms have been extremely successful. The sales of both the current uniforms and the throwbacks have gone up since they were introduced, and the fan response has been terrific," Roberts said.

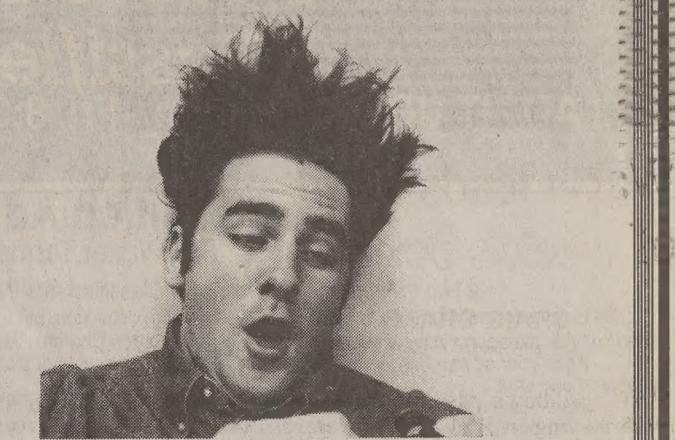

The San Diego Chargers have had the most success both on and off the field with their 1961 jerseys. The team is undefeated and the uniform is a hit. Because the team is currently undefeated in their throwbacks, a team spokesperson does not rule out superstition as a factor in the new found popularity in the old powder blue and lightning bolts. Regardless of whether it's success is attributed to superstition or nostalgia, the San Diego fans have been rampant over the uniform change.

Roberts believes that there could be a permanent change in store for Charger fans.

"A change has been discussed, because the organization has gotten an overwhelming response from the fans. The old lightning bolts have recalled a lot of enthusiasm, which has created the discussion in switching," Roberts said.

There are only seven more throwback games coming up during the rest of the season.

CROSSWALKS give deer the right of way

DEER X-ING

Universe graphic by Jason Jolley said. "Now it's 300, and there's no doubt that it's even higher than those we found."

The highway runs through the middle of a major migrating zone, Dalton said. Although underpasses and overpasses have been installed, the cost is from $100,000 to $1 million per pass. The new crosswalks are less expensive, costing from $10,000 to $20,000.

Mark Lehner, a graduate student at Utah State University, spends his weekends nightscoping the crosswalks — recording the deer usage and movements. Some nights not a deer is seen, and other nights up to 10 deer using the crosswalks have been recorded, Lehner said.

The Utah Department of Transportation has also installed speed counters to assess the speed of the vehicles.

"The crosswalks have been in use about two to three weeks, and to my knowledge, not one deer has been killed within a crosswalk," Dalton said.

"Deer have been killed in other areas, but not in a walk."

Construction was completed in September; it is critical to the success of the project that motorists respond to the structures, Romin said.

Deer crossing warning signs, as well as cattle stripes, are posted 1,000 feet and 500 feet from the crosswalks, to warn motorists of the upcoming walkway. It is essential that drivers notice the signs and slow their vehicle for deer that may be in the vicinity, Romin said.

"We need to train the public to understand. Four or five people are killed by deer in this area every year, and no one wants that," Dalton said.

religion into the case, Kendall said people fail to realize that this is a discrimination case.

In an affidavit filed in support of BYU's motion, President Rex Lee said, "The University's policy concerning gender segregation of single students in their living quarters is viewed by the University and its Board of Trustees as essential to the implementation and support of this fundamental tenet."

Mandela solicits American investments during first visit as president

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Grateful for past help and seeking more, Nelson Mandela asked Americans Tuesday to expand the support they gave South Africa in the victory against apartheid — this time by helping revive his nation's economy.

"Come and invest in our country," he said. "I come here ... knowing I will not go back with empty hands."

President Clinton welcomed Mandela to an exuberant White House ceremony underscoring the 76-year-old African leader's rise from imprisonment in the apartheid state to the presidency of South Africa's new democracy.

On his first visit to the United States since his inauguration in May, Mandela was greeted by 4,000 guests at the White House, including diplomats and politicians, actress Alfre Woodard and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman John Shalikashvili.

Mandela, on a weeklong visit to New York and Washington in search of business investment, said he had come with a message.

"People of the United States of America, open your markets to us. People of the United States of America, come and invest in our country," Mandela said.

Clinton told Mandela the United States is committed to helping him fight apartheid's legacy of joblessness, homelessness and poverty.

"We will walk every mile with you and ... we will not grow weary on the way," Clinton said. Noting Mandela's 27 years in prison and emergence as the elected president, Clinton said,

"You are living proof that the forces of justice and reconciliation can bridge any divide."

Clinton has already promised a three-year, $600 million package of assistance for South Africa's struggle with poverty, a 40 percent unemployment rate and 50 percent illiteracy rate. Some $200 million has been promised in the five months since Mandela was elected.

The two presidents held a brief business meeting at the White House as a prelude to a larger working session. At the State Department, Mandela had lunch with executives of leading U.S. companies as well as social activists, diplomats and religious leaders.

Mandela told them his government is "committed to creating an environment containing optimal conditions for investment and economic growth."

A formal state dinner is scheduled Tuesday night with entering diva singer Whitney Houston.

Mandela, at the White House, paid credit to the United States' ability to dismantle apartheid through negotiations and diplomatic pressure.

Serbs expel last Muslims; conflict marks end of an era

Associated Press

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — First came intimidation and terror, then expulsion. Now, after 29 months of war, the job is nearly done. Northern and eastern Bosnia are almost purely Serb.

What the last groups of Muslims struggling into Tuzla from northeastern towns represent is perhaps even more tragic than the combined weight of their suffering.

Their expulsions by Bosnian Serbs mark the end of an era extending back centuries when Muslims, Serbs and Croats shared land as friends and neighbors. Now only several thousand non-Serbs remain in northern and eastern Bosnia, and probably only a few hundred in the northeast corner.

"My great-grandfather and his father lived in Janja. But I fear that no Muslim will ever be born there again," said Habid Sabanovic as he surveyed his new "home" — a sea of mattresses and refugees crowded into a Tuzla sports hall.

"They told us this was Serb land, and we have no business there," said his daughter, Senada Hamzic.

Living together was rarely easy. Under 500 years of Ottoman rule, animosities bubbled between Turks and Bosnians who converted to Islam and Serbs and Croats who remained Christian.

Serb-Croat killings in neighboring Croatia during World War II spilled into Bosnia. Serbs razed Croat villages. Croats, sometimes helped by Muslims, leveled Serb towns.

Still, bonds of friendship and family eventually helped heal those wounds. Then came this war, with mass expulsions that have changed the population patterns of Bosnia, perhaps forever.

Serbian purges of non-Serbs began shortly after the first shots were fired in April 1992. Of about 2 million people uprooted by the war, 750,000 are non-Serbs from eastern and northern Bosnia, according to U.N. statistics.

Similar purges by Croats and Muslims pale in comparison to the magnitude of the Serb-orchestrated expulsions.

Many Muslims tried to hang on, unwilling to believe that Serb families who had been their neighbors for generations would turn on them. Some took in refugee Serbs or converted to Christianity in attempts to placate Serb authorities.

"In the beginning, it did not look like they would force all the Muslims out," Notari said.

"At first, when they expelled Muslim doctors and lawyers and teachers, it looked like they just wanted to weaken the Muslim community," she said. "But now they have been expelling the sick, the old, the mentally disabled. ... It looks like they really want to get rid of everybody who is not a Serb."
